

Tennessee Association of Professional Mediators

Message from TAPM President LEIGH ANN ROBERTS

I trust that each of you is having a great summer, and I hope this message finds you enjoying July. As the temperature rises, I have to notice that the conversation about mediation and ADR in Tennessee is also heating up! The Tennessee Supreme Court has pulled together ADR professionals and constituency from points across the state to discuss how mediation and ADR can address the access to justice issues in our state. Government agencies and officials at the state and federal level are increasingly looking to mediation and ADR professionals for resources. Local and state bar associations are revisiting rules of ethics regarding educating litigants about mediation and ADR...just to name a few examples. And, TAPM? Well, TAPM members appear to be at the heart of every conversation. It is exciting to see how TAPM members are impacting our state and the decisions it makes about mediation and ADR.

Check out the recent articles discussing mediation and ADR in Tennessee that appeared in the Nashville Business Journal June 19, 2009. Click President's Message to read.

Faith-Based Reconcilers: The Most Difficult Path

Larry Bridgesmith
ICM Executive Director

Those who are engaged in peace-building, reconciliation and conflict management processes know that the most difficult route to peace may be among people of faith. Ministers, pastors and clergy report that up to fifty percent of their time is spent dealing with conflict. They also admit that they have received no training in the skills of conflict management. Divinity degrees, pastoral conferences and clerical training have all assumed that conflict doesn't occur among people of faith.

TAPM NEWSLETTERS

TAPM Newsletters are published Bi-Monthly. The next issue will be September 15, 2009. We are excited to announce TAPM has a newsletter editor! Meet Emily Ghearing:

Hello, everyone! My name is Emily Ghearing. I am a graduate student at Lipscomb University's Institute of Conflict Management and interning with TAPM this summer. I love the work that TAPM does and am pleased to be able to help in any way I can. That's why I'm excited to volunteer my editing services to the TAPM newsletter. A uniformly edited newsletter with lots of member participation can help us spread the word about mediation to an even larger audience.

I have a degree in English and have done freelance writing and editing work in a variety of fields. Writing articles for the TAPM newsletter is a great way for you to enhance your exposure in the mediation community, and I will assist you in every way I can, from early editing and structure development to final proofing. Contact me anytime with your questions or concerns, and I will get back to you ASAP.

I look forward to seeing everyone's contributions!

Those who work regularly with churches, synagogues and temples of every description know differently. Because transcendent values and eternal consequences may be at risk, religious-based conflict can be some of the most intransigent and unhealthy conflict we encounter. Wars are fought and relationships are sacrificed at the altar of religious differences. Professional conflict managers are often called upon to assist when parties who share a common faith differ on matters of change, personnel and governance related to their faith orientation. Mediators, facilitators, trainers and system design specialists can all be helpful in faith-based conflict if they understand how it may differ from the “ordinary” commercial, legal or community-based dispute. Nashville Conflict Resolution Center Uses Film to Prompt Discussion about Forgiveness

On May 14, the Nashville Conflict Resolution Center (NCRC) gathered volunteers together at the Institute for Conflict Management at Lipscomb University to view the 2007 award-winning documentary film, The Power of Forgiveness. More than sixty people came to see the awe-inspiring film and to engage in discussion on this very important topic. NCRC invited special guest Susan McBride to talk about the role forgiveness plays in her work with prisoners and victims’ families.

What is the nature of a forgiving person, and what limitations do each of us place on forgiveness? These are some of the questions that The Power of Forgiveness prompted viewers to consider. Through a series of vignettes featuring Nobel Laureate Elie Wiesel, Buddhist teacher Thich Nhat Hanh, author Thomas Moore and others, the film offered a multiplicity of perspectives on forgiveness, ranging from the scientific to the religious and spiritual. CASES & RESOLUTIONS:

Mediation Quote:

“When controversy breaks out, there is no single truth, only different stories about reality. The most dangerous combatants are those who cannot acknowledge multiple realities. Conflicts are kaleidoscopic with many different truths. So the first order of business is to cease antagonizing each other long enough to explore the view planes people are operating on. The second is to understand the different and varied meanings the conflict is imbued with. Only then can you start the journey towards solutions.”

Directed Body Movements Can Assist Problem Solving

Recent study of “embodied cognition,” the link between mind and body, indicates that how people move their bodies may influence how they solve problems. This occurs even when a third party directs the movements of the problem solver, which in the research involved arm swinging.

Court Refuses to Allow Plaintiff to Cure Failure to Mediate

A Kansas appellate court affirmed dismissal of a homebuyer's lawsuit against the seller and realtor for failure to first proceed with mediation as required by the purchase contract. When confronted with the defense of failure to mediate, the homebuyer sought to mediate and moved to compel mediation. But the court concluded it was too late and dismissed the litigation, even though the contract provision did not expressly state that the mediation must occur prior to filing suit. The court ruled that when parties contractually agree to mediate they should not be able to continue with their litigation by late compliance with their obligation, as delayed mediation cannot fully achieve its goals.

Court Holds that Litigation Damages Cannot be Based on Amount Set in Mediation

A Georgia appellate court reversed a trial court's judgment which relied on the amount agreed upon in mediation with a third party as the measure of consequential damages. The mediation agreement was not performed after discovering the product was defective, but the appellate court concluded that the failure to carry out the mediation agreement was not directly attributable to the breach of warranty, and that the amount agreed to in mediation was not causally connected to the defective product.

Early Resolution of Multi-Party Mining Disaster Achieved in Mediation

The 2007 Crandall Canyon mine disaster wrongful death and personal injury lawsuits were resolved in mediation for more than $22 million. The complex cases involved more than 100 participants, including sixteen groups of family plaintiffs, seven defendants, six primary insurance companies, additional secondary insurers, plus four employers. Participants considered the mediation to be challenging, with a weeklong mediation session, followed by negotiations among counsel, and a final marathon day of mediation. However, settlement was reached prior to any depositions in the case and saved an estimated five years of litigation and a huge emotional and financial toll.

Program Criticized for Resolving Property Reassessment Challenges

All 400 cases mediated with property owners who challenged their property assessments have settled since Luzerne County's mandatory mediation program began in December 2008. To settle the challenges, reductions in assessed value amounting to $31.6 million have been made. The Pennsylvania county's reassessment company is arguing in court that the county is contractually required to pay the company to defend assessment appeals and to participate in the mediations, which it opposed. The company, which has been paid $8 million for its reassessment work, alleges that the modifications have been made without adequate basis, reducing tax and school revenues by hundreds of thousands of dollars, but the county stands behind the mediation process. The county has about another 1,600 mediations to go.

Wisconsin Smart Growth Requirements May Spur Mediation

Wisconsin counties, cities and towns are required to complete comprehensive smart growth plans covering utilities, economic development, housing, transportation, intergovernmental relations and more under the Wisconsin Comprehensive Planning Law, enacted in 1999, which contains a deadline of January 1, 2010. The state has been offering $2 million a year in grants to help local governments develop their complex plans, which can be aided by mediation, especially in furthering cooperation among communities. Completed smart growth plans range from 100 to 500 pages in length. Once the January 1 deadline arrives, local governments may only take action consistent with their comprehensive plans. The Department of Administration maintains a roster of dispute resolution providers who can assist in intergovernmental and related issues.

Early Mediation Becoming More Common in Midwest

Mediators and counsel in the Chicago area report seeing many more commercial disputes being mediated prior to litigation being filed. Some attribute it to the economic climate, while others believe it may be the natural result of court programs encouraging parties to mediate. The Cook County Circuit Court's Law Division began a mediation program five years ago, while the Court's Chancery Division began its mediation program in early 2007, both of which result in hundreds of mediated cases each year. While counsel are more willing to work out disputes earlier, some also observe that lawyers are increasingly reluctant to pay a mediator until after they first try to settle the matter through direct negotiations.

- Nevada has enacted legislation requiring lenders to meet with homeowners who may request mediation if they receive a foreclosure notice. The program takes effect on July 1 and may generate up to 1,500 mediation requests a month, as Nevada has the worst foreclosure rate in the country. The first mediations will be conducted by senior judges and settlement judges; more than 350 lawyers who have expressed interest in acting as mediators, but must both be experienced and receive training. The costs of mediation are to be shared, with homeowners and lenders paying $200 each. The Nevada Supreme Court issued rules for the mediation program after holding public hearings.

New Chinese Law Provides for Mediation of Rural Land Disputes

China's top legislature enacted legislation on mediation and arbitration of rural land contract disputes. The law is to ensure rural stability by addressing the growing number of disputes resulting from allocating publicly-owned farmland to individual households using long term contracts. Over 50,000 land dispute cases arose from 2003 to 2008. Arbitration has been used in land disputes since the late 1990s, with patchwork arbitration regulations in 23 provinces. Under the new national law, when a land dispute arises the parties can negotiate directly or obtain mediation assistance from a village committee or local government. The law recommends that local officials encourage use of mediation. If mediation is not successful, the parties can apply for arbitration or go to court. The law takes effect January 1, 2010.
